Kingdom management pathfinder kingmaker auto

Pathfinder: Kingmaker > General Discussions > Topic Details Does "Auto Kingdom Management" actually do anything? I took that setting on the assumption that the kindom would actually... you know... manage itself. All it seems to have done is break Chapter 2. It seems that with "auto" turned on I can't access the screen to assign duties... which is the first quest in Chapter 2... and I have Kingdom die a slow death and their is nothing I can do...Well, the only think I seem to be able to do is to trun on "invincible kingdom" ... which appears to be be mandatory in "auto kingdom management"? Note: This is ONLY to be used to report spam, advertising, and problematic (harassment, fighting, or rude) posts. Ive been reading some guides about kingdom management but noone of them give a good insight into auto management. Also most of the discussion about this issue that i found is kind of outdated, lots of patches were released since then, so i will just ask now for actual confirmed info. If i switch kingdom management to automatic right after im on my feet for the first time after becoming a baron, can i stop worrying about any management? Or better yet, what management actions are considered auto in this case? I saw there are story matters that gotta be solved anyway, so besides that what do i have to worry about? Will i miss anything worthwile (like meaninful quests (immersion), loot, considerable amounts of xp, special vendors) if im playing on auto? Do i get any notifications about kingdom stuff to attend (while having auto management of course) during my expeditions or do i have to visit my cities from time to time and do something there first? What worries me is that i saw people often mention that their kingdom gets destroyed anyway while having auto management, and the game specifically mentions that it handles it on its own and we are safe. This whole design is not my cup of tea, way too intrusive and distracting (which also seems to be an overkill) so id like to focus on my team affairs from traditional crpg's view and not intervene into this whole kingdom sim too much. New Badge Earned 210 I Spent Way Too Much Time In Pathfinder: Wrath Of The Righteous' Character Creation This Week | MMORPG.com Bradford doesn't too much care for character creation tools. The identity of the character spent in a creation tool and he regrets nothing. Read the full story here Image credit to Owlcat Games Just last year, Owlcat Games took on the mighty task of turning Paizo Publishing's Pathfinder role-playing game into a full-fledged video game. The title has since cultivated a cult following of dedicated fans. That being said, the game in particular you will likely need help with. You will need to learn how to manage your kingdom. Pathfinder: Kingmaker features a complex kingdom management system that requires constant care and supervision from the player. There is an option within the game to allow the A.I. to manage the kingdom for you. However, some players have decided to forgo the A.I.'s help in favor of a better challenge. If you want to learn some useful tips and tricks to managing your kingdom, you will want to pay attention to every single stat available to you. In total, there are 10 primary stats. If any one of these values gets too low, you may be in deep trouble. But, don't worry. There are ways to keep their levels high. Each primary stat has an advisor, which will oversee your kingdom with varying success based on their attributes. You can see a full breakdown of the concept down below. Primary StatAdviserAttributeCommunityRegentCharismaLoyaltyCouncilorWisdomArmy GeneralStrengthDivineHigh PriestWisdomEconomyTreasurerIntelligenceRelationsGrand DiplomatCharismaCultureCuratorCharismaStabilityWardenConstitutionArcaneMagisterIntelligenceEspionageMinisterDexterity In order to keep each of these primary stats high, you will want to appoint advisers for each role based on their correlating ability scores. For instance, a high charisma character will make for a great Grand Diplomat, Curator or Regent. 2. Know Where to find them. Use Rations and Camping Supplies A huge part of properly managing your kingdom is about properly managing your time. It will take a considerable amount of time whenever you travel with your party. However, it can take a considerably larger amount of time if your party is not properly prepared. If you leave your kingdom for a quest without any camping or other food. This process can take hours. Every passing hour in Pathfinder: Kingmaker is another opportunity for something to go wrong in your kingdom. Your lands and people, after all, require constant micro-managing. Consequently, you are going to want to reduce your time spent traveling by keeping a hefty supply of rations on hands at all times. 4. You Can Buy BP Build points, also known as BP, are used for just about everything when it comes to kingdom management. Settlement upgrades, project management and construction are just some of the things you will need this vital resource, your kingdom's growth will come to a screeching halt. Consequently, you are going to want to keep your BP up at all times. You may notice late in the game that you have a surplus of gold, but a deficit of BP. As it turns out, you can actually buy BP for 80 gold per point at a merchant in central square. Take advantage of this feature to keep your kingdom growing. 5. Complete Your Quests Sometimes you can do everything right and still find yourself dealing with a crumbling kingdom. The reason for this is because new quests often introduce new problems. Sometimes when you receive a new quests often introduce new problems. Sometimes when you receive a new quests often introduce new problems. Sometimes when you receive a new quests often introduce new problems. Sometimes when you receive a new quests often introduce new problems. Sometimes when you receive a new quests often introduce new problems. these debuffs will become. The negative effects ignored missions can have on your kingdom can be completely devastating, so make sure to finish each mission and resolve each crisis as they sprout up. 6. Save Before You Begin Major Projects As part of managing your kingdom, you will have the opportunity to complete certain projects. Some will only take a few days, but many will take upwards of half a month to complete. You will be forced to skip forward through those days, unable to make any other decisions for your kingdom during that time. Consequently, you are going to want to save your game before ever accepting longer projects. If after accepting and waiting out the project your kingdom ends up in disarray, simply re-load your save file and try another approach to improving your kingdom. It would also be wise to make a hard save after every major chapter within the game. There will be times when certain decisions lead to your kingdom spiraling out of control. Having a plethora of various hard saves from different stages of your playthrough to fall back on can be quite comforting during these moments. 7. You Will Not Always See Your Notifications In order to access your kingdom, you will have to return before further managing your kingdom. Likewise, you will only see notifications concerning your kingdom if you are within your kingdom or kingdom events, being problems and opportunities. Problems Always Take Precedent Over Opportunities There are two different types of kingdom events, being problems and opportunities. Opportunity events are chances for you to improve your kingdom. However, there are no punitive measures for cancelling or simply do not finish them, your kingdom will suffer for it. Consequently, you are going to want to prioritize problem events over opportunities. Unfortunately, problem events tend to sprout up like weeds. As a result, you will have to be quite vigilant and proactive when it comes to these events. 9. Upgrade your main village to a town after you have claimed two new regions and have built settlements within them. The more regions you procure and the more settlements in total, being villages, towns and cities. 10. The More Unrest You Have, The Lower Your Bonuses Will Be There are six stages to civil wellness in total. More civil wellness in total. More Bulletin Boards Bulletin Boards provide a Military bonus of +1 and +2 bonus to resolving problems in the region the boards' effects do not stack with each other, they will make resolving issues in each of your land holdings far less troublesome. 12. Don't Be Too Hasty When it Comes to Building Building various structures within your lands will boost your overall kingdom stats. If you have enough additional BP to spend on structures, then this can be a great way to bring your kingdom events. Consequently, you are going to want to minimize your building habits and save a tidy sum of your BP for finishing events.
